

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. But when large companies control the airwaves, we get more of what's good for the bottom line and less of what we need for our democracy. Instead of something produced at "News Central" far away, it's more important that we see real people from our own communities and more substantive news about issues that matter.

The FCC has come down hard on programs for not fulfilling their duty to respect the public's interest. Personally I see Sinclair forcing personal political views on the public a lot more harmful than Janet Jackson's 'uniform malfunction'.
